The problem of plagiarism has many dimensions:

- The presence of plagiarism creates unfair conditions for students that work hard and honest. This is especially evident when students compete for employment or admittance to higher education when they have graduated from their present education.
- The presence of plagiarism is an immediate threat to the quality of education and science. A degree is supposed to reflect the knowledge and skill that the holder possesses, and these attributes can not be acquired by way of cheating.
- The academic enterprise is by tradition built on a concept of intellectual honesty – the academic integrity. The trust the outside world places in education and science is in turn based on this belief. The presence of plagiarism may undermine this trust and therefore constitutes a basic threat to the academic integrity.
- Plagiarism is a violation of the rights of the actual author.
